

Loom Script.

One thought per line. Pause at every break. Flash each cover for a few seconds. The briefs do the heavy lifting; you just give the frame. Read it slow.

► YOU, ON CAMERA

Hey, I'm Farrice. Let me quickly walk you through both ads.

They're both for the same guy.

He's in his forties. He's tried this stuff. It didn't work.

So now he blames himself.

And you don't win that guy with a bigger promise.

You win him by finally telling him why nothing worked.

That's what both ads do.

SHOW THE JCKED COVER

First one's JCKED. The carnitine one.

The whole idea is a locked vault.

His fat isn't stubborn. It's locked. And carnitine's the key.

Most brands give you barely any.

So he stops blaming himself, and goes, oh, it's not me. It's the dose.

SHOW THE PURAVITA COVER

Second one's Puravita. The magnesium one.

The idea is a battery you can't see.

His blood test says he's fine. But it misses most of it.

So he thinks he's getting old. He's really just running low.

And no one ever told him.

That one's the bigger swing.

He doesn't even know he has a problem yet.

But that's most of the market.

Everyone else only talks to the guys who already know.

► BACK TO YOU

So that's the move.

I don't sell the pill. I change the story he tells himself.

The briefs have the rest, the scripts, the look, the test plan.

Take a look. Happy to walk you through any of it.

Read it slow. The line breaks are your breath. If a word trips you, say it your way.
